System of tests for rubella (German measles) antibodies, and subsidies for the cost of vaccination

- ・風しんの抗体検査・予防接種の費用助成

Rubella (German measles) is a very infectious illness that spreads easily from person to person by means of droplet infection (coughing, etc.). The main symptoms of the illness are a fever and a rash.

A system of tests for rubella antibodies, and subsidies for the cost of vaccination, is being introduced across the country. Under this system of subsidies, it will be possible to be checked for antibodies at any participating medical facility across the country. Even if an individual only wishes to be vaccinated, as a rule it will be necessary to be checked for antibodies.

Men born between April 2nd 1962 and April 1st 1979 are eligible for the check and subsidy under the system. To be checked for antibodies and to be vaccinated under the system, you will need a coupon issued by the city. These coupons will be sent out from around the end of April.
